Rebuilding What Matters Most.

When Glenda's four children entered foster care, everything changed. After years of housing instability and the loss of their father, her family had already faced more than most. Losing her children was devastating—but it became a turning point. She made a decision: she would do whatever it took to bring them home.

With support from Family Support Council, a funded partner of United Way of Northwest Georgia, Glenda began rebuilding her life step by step. She secured stable housing and employment, prioritized her mental health, and completed every requirement needed to reunite with her children.

Today, Glenda and her children are together again, building a future filled with stability and hope. Because of support like yours, families facing their hardest moments are met with guidance, advocacy, and the opportunity to start again.
