

finding your place

Preparing the next generation

Matthew Lewallen joined United Way of Northwest Georgia's Youth Council looking for a way to serve his community. What he found was something much bigger – leadership, confidence, and a place where he felt he belonged.

Through the Youth Council, Matthew gained real-world leadership experience through service projects, fundraisers, and helping lead United Way's Campaign Kickoff event. As a student at Christian Heritage School, those experiences helped shape him into a leader both in school and throughout the community.

“United Way showed me how to lead with confidence,” Matthew shared. “As I attend Georgia Institute of Technology in the fall, I know these experiences will help me stand out by keeping service at the center of who I am.”

Because of support like yours, students like Matthew are discovering their potential and becoming the next generation of compassionate leaders our community needs.
