United Way supporter since 1994

Support + Jodds
When you need it

Paula Glover

When Paula Glover first turned to United Way of Northwest Georgia in 1994, she was facing a difficult season and needed support. What she found was more than assistance – she found hope, compassion, and a community that showed up when it mattered most.

That experience stayed with her.

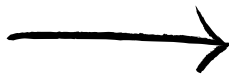

Today, Paula is a dedicated supporter of United Way and an employee at Shaw Industries, where she continues to help create impact both in the workplace and throughout the community. For more than three decades, Paula has watched United Way continue to change lives across Northwest Georgia – helping families through crisis, supporting children, and connecting neighbors to the resources they need to move forward. Because of the support she once received, Paula made it her mission to give back so others could experience that same hope.

“I know what it feels like to need help,” Paula shared. “And I know how much it means when someone is there for you. United Way changed my life, and that’s why I continue to support it today.”

Paula’s story is a powerful reminder that behind every donation is a real person, a real family, and a real moment of need. The generosity of donors makes it possible for someone facing uncertainty today to find stability, encouragement, and a path forward tomorrow.

Because when you give to United Way of Northwest Georgia, you are more than a donor – you are part of someone’s turning point.
